INSURANCE BOR SEAMEN A further development (says, the Times) ho now been brought about in the scheme for the insurance of seamen and firemen, the establish ment of which has been agreed to by the execu ive council of the Shipping Federation. may be remaindered that the decision arrived at was that the possession of a Federation regisration ticket, for which a fee of is, is charged, should, without further payment, cover jusurances as follows:-Captains, £100; first engineers, £100; other engineers, £50; mates, £50 seamen and firemen. £25 : such sums to be pain by the Federation in the event of the ficket holders being killed or drowned at sea while serving on a Federation ship. Among the criticisms to which this scheme has given rise t has been pointed out that there are many seamen who, being single men and having no one dependent on them, would greatly prefer to be offered some pecuniary benefit for themselves in the event of disablement, than simply to be omrowered to leave a sum of £25 to some particular adividual in the event of their death. It has therefore, now been definitely decided that a ticket-holder shall have the option, in case of disblement during the discharge of his duties, of receiving for a certain period a sum of money per week, the total of which will be equal to th full soment of the insurance otherwise covered by the ticket in the event of his being killed or

It has further been urged in various quarters that it would be highly desirable if a pension fund could be established as well. But we learn that the committee which has the matter in hand as, after mature consideration, decided that the establishment of a pension fund would be far too vast and complicated a project for them to undortaks, past experience showing that such fund could not be founded without contributions from the seamen themselves, and that these conributions would have to be compulsory and enforced by Act of Parliament. Until there is a reasonable probability of State aid being forthcoming, the shipowners are evidently acting with prudence in preferring to give an immediate time, in placing, for the present at least, a due J. F. Lemm, architect in charge of the build- restraint upon their aspirations.
